1H 2024 vs 2H 2023

- Resilient financial performance underpinned by strong positive portfolio reversions. Recorded positive reversion of >40% for a major contract renewal in Singapore as part of the Keppel leases
- Higher gross revenue in 1H 2024 mainly due to healthy positive reversions and escalations across portfolio as well as higher variable rent arising from the settlement sum received relating to the dispute with DXC³
- Guangdong DCs 1H 2024 income net off via loss allowance⁴. Impact to 1H 2024 DPU of 0.638 cents
- Higher DPU mainly due to reasons above partially offset by less favourable hedges entered for 1H 2024 foreign-sourced income

1H 2024 vs 1H 2023

- Lower DPU mainly due to loss allowance for the Guangdong DCs, higher finance costs and depreciation of foreign currencies against the SGD, partially offset by increase in rents from strong positive reversions and escalations as well as higher variable rent arising from the DXC settlement sum received³

Outlook

Data Centre Growth Driven by Digital Transformation

- Generative artificial intelligence (AI) is expected to become a significant demand driver, estimated to take up roughly 50% or more of the existing hyperscale demand for global data centre capacity. Cloud service providers are stepping up expansion plans globally, including AWS which is planning to spend US$150b globally from 2024 to 2039 and Microsoft which is investing US$2.9b in Japan over 2025¹.

- The Asia Pacific-colocation data centre market size is projected to grow at a five-year compound annual growth rate of 13.3% to 19,069 MW by 2028, from ~10,233 MW of critical IT capacity in 2023, driven by digitalisation, the adoption of cloud computing and other data-intensive services, proliferation of 5G networks and the Internet of Things, as well as regulatory policies mandating local data storage².

- Europe has seen rental increases of 10% to 15% over the past year due to capacity constraints in its key FLAPD (Frankfurt, London, Amsterdam, Paris and Dublin) markets. Southern Europe is poised to see the most significant growth in secondary markets, particularly in Milan and Madrid, due to the new cloud regions and subsea cable landings in the region¹.

- Sustainability constraints and regulatory frameworks are expected to expand, leading to a shift towards more sustainable practices and technologies³.

Singapore Data Centre Market

- Singapore is a regional DC hub, with a total capacity exceeding 1.4 GW¹ and is currently close to full occupancy.
- Despite significant self-build pipeline capacity, Singapore remains predominantly a colocation DC market with colocation capacity accounting for close to 60% of the total DC market².
- Hyperscale cloud continues to be a significant demand driver, accounting for 41% of the demand in 2023, and expected to stay high as Singapore plays an important role in serving regional demand².
- The Singapore DC market is expected to remain tight with hyperscale lease rates ranging between US$260 - 400/kW per month to trend upwards over the next few years².
- Power constraints continue to remain a significant challenge and the impacts of AI will raise further concerns around power and sustainability².
- Singapore has rolled out a Green Data Centre Roadmap-to develop sustainable data centres aiming to provide at least 300MW of additional capacity in the near term – with another 200MW or more that could be added for operators who tap green energy³. The Singapore DC market is expected to remain supply constrained despite the potential 500MW which will enable the market to grow to around 2GW which would still be insufficient in the long term based on historical market growth.
- ESG goals remain at the forefront of the market with IMDA pushing for all facilities to operate at a PUE of 1.3 or lower and expanding the use of green energy².
